“ She was the fire that spread through all of us. I remember running in from picking mulberries as a kid after she asked us not to get dirty or get any on our hands or faces and her looking at us up and down covered in the juice. She would make mulberry cobbler. amazing cook is an understatement. Nothing could beat her gumbo or smothered chicken. I loved coming over and her insisting on us having a cup of coffee. She loved making herself beautiful and wearing the best perfumes. I could always smell her miles down the road. She filled the room with her voice and personality. I can't put my finger on particular things I will miss because I miss everything. Thank you grandma. Thank you for putting pieces of you in me. Thank you for loving me. Thank you for everything.
